I just realized something really, really scary.

hydrafalling2

These are the official Scholastic forums. They aren't just a little community for kids. If the Head Scholastic People wanted to ban literally all of us or even completely remove Wings of Fire, they could do it. There's nothing we could do to stop them. They don't want new fans to associate Scholastic with rebellion and communism.

Be nice to the mods, please. They might be our only friends.

Seriously.

When did any of us say that we supported real-life communism? Internet freedom and communism are two very different things.

Jadedragon. Don't swear.

Also, the mods literally said they were dictators, and if we make a fuss about that, everyone will know.

@Jade Dragon: Most people (though apparently not the modmins) believe that using exclamations such as "Oh my God!" to represent shock is swearing.

Do you really, really want me to go into it? No? Okay, then just accept that for the majority of Christians, saying "God" in vain is swearing and is really hurtful. I've had an awful day. I'm not going to argue about THAT, too.

foreststorm33

That's truer than I'd like it to be

Also, Jade Dragon probably doesn't consider that swearing - I know I don't - because she's not Christian - I'm not - or some other reason, so she probably didn't mean to offend anyone. Sorry if that was offensive. Or extraordinarily obvious.

dragonsoul1197

I remember seeing a thread where a mod posted, reinforcing the rules. Then the forumers on the thread told the mod to go away, and in a rude way too. The sad part is that most of the forumers were apart of the angry group, and only one or two were telling them to stop. And these weren't any new forumers or forumers that always caused trouble, they were normal forumers.

tsk tsk tsk. Disappointing. Even when I saw that post, I knew they were basically asking for it, and couldn't see how important the mods were. They get it didn't though, I think.

Though I didn't know that forumers from 2017 could get a bit heated over a random topic.

to be fair, at that point we had no indication that the mods actually cared about us. we had been basically abandoned for a long time, and people had good reason to be angry. maybe not fair to the poor mod who was just doing their job, but people weren't just being rude for the sake of being rude.
